This year at Remai Modern, not unlike 2020, was accompanied by many challenges brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic. But as we navigated the ebbs and flows of the virus, not to mention changing health and safety requirements, the museum built a phenomenal amount of momentum and achieved important milestones.

The Board’s largest accomplishment of 2021 was the completion of Remai Modern’s new strategic plan. This process began in the fall of 2020 and was informed by extensive consultation with key groups including artists and arts organizations, Indigenous stakeholders including Elders, the business community, tourism organizations, educators, Remai Modern members, donors, staff and the general public. We are immensely grateful for all the valuable feedback we received. The resulting plan outlines four key goals for Remai Modern over the next five years and beyond:

1. Accessibility, Inclusivity and Relevance
2. An Institution Rooted in Place
3. Governance, Operations and Sustainability
4. Towards Truth, Reconciliation and Self-Determination

While the Board sets out the goals for Remai Modern, it is up to museum leadership and staff to decide how those goals are reached. We can’t wait to see how the team tackles this next chapter, with the needs and interests of diverse communities at the heart of everything Remai Modern does.

Co-Executive Director & CEOs Aileen Burns and Johan Lundh continue to impress us with their insightful, inclusive and community-minded approach to the present and future of the museum. After joining the organization mid-way through the first pandemic year (during a five-month closure no less), it’s been invigorating to work with them on foundational projects like the strategic plan.

On behalf of the entire Board I want to thank Remai Modern’s talented staff for rising to the challenge of running a museum during a pandemic and working as a team to connect with and inspire audiences in Saskatoon and beyond. The museum continues to be a safe, welcoming and exciting place to visit thanks to the efforts of such dedicated people.

I also want to thank the members of the Remai Modern Board and Remai Modern Foundation Board, all of whom volunteer their time and expertise to this museum thanks to a shared passion for culture and community. We are incredibly lucky to have the skills of so many talented citizens are our disposal.

We are also grateful for the continued support of the Frank and Ellen Remai Foundation. The museum’s lead patron Ellen Remai has made, and continues to make, incredible contributions to Saskatoon’s cultural fabric that will benefit the city for many decades to come. Along with the support of our core funders — the City of Saskatoon, the Canada Council for the Arts, SK Arts and Sask Lotteries, and our many sponsors, donors and members — we can ensure everyone in our community has access to art and art programs. Thank you for supporting Remai Modern!

Our first full year at Remai Modern as Co-Executive Director & CEOs was all at once hopeful, hectic, challenging and rewarding. We are immensely proud of this organization and our team for all of its achievements in 2021.

We feel fortunate to have remained open throughout the year despite the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. We are even more grateful that visitors continued to support the museum and reported feeling safe and welcome in our space.

One big step for Remai Modern in late 2021 was the release of the museum’s new strategic plan. Thank you to the Board for stewarding this crucial project, which helps us set a course for the next five years and responds to community feedback in meaningful ways. Museum staff across all departments are already working to meet the goals laid out in the plan. Through this process, we feel confident in our ability to connect, inspire and challenge diverse audiences through equitable and accessible programs.

During the year, the museum shared 10 diverse exhibitions with audiences. These included works by emerging and established Prairie artists including Tenille K Campbell, Zachari Logan, Ruth Cuthand and Wally Dion; a major project by long-running Indigenous artist collective Postcommodity; and exhibitions that showcased our collection in new contexts, to name a few. The exhibitions featured a wealth of themes and voices, often reflecting on the complexities of the time we’re living in.

We were excited to welcome the museum’s new Head of Exhibitions & Collections/Chief Curator Michelle Jacques in 2021. She brings a wealth of experience and expertise to our curatorial department. We were also delighted to appoint Tara Janzen as our new Director of Development to lead the museum’s fundraising efforts.

In 2021, we hosted countless programs, including a new family focused event called WEGO. We were delighted to watch thousands of residents and visitors of all ages engage with art, music, performance and each other. The event renewed our optimism around large events at the museum and a future where we can gather together more frequently.

We want to acknowledge the incredible support of our lead patron Ellen Remai, who inspires us all to give back to our community, and our core funders including the City of Saskatoon. Thanks are also owed to everyone who supported the museum this year, from members and donors to anyone who visited or attended a Remai Modern program.

In addition to extending a big thank you to Remai Modern’s Board of Directors we also want to acknowledge the contributions of the Remai Modern Foundation Board. It’s humbling to have the support of so many enthusiastic individuals in our mission to connect people with art.

We are grateful for our fantastic staff at Remai Modern. Every employee contributes to our vision to be a welcoming and inclusive public gathering place where we recognize the past, engage with the present, and envision new futures together through art.

Saskatoon Guernica by artist Adad Hannah was created with support from a group of University of Saskatchewan students who helped Hannah assemble the installation using ubiquitous materials of everyday life, allowing viewers to clearly see how the work was put together.

More than a year into a pandemic, the concept of healing was on the minds of Remai Modern’s curatorial team. In their first curatorial outing at the museum, Aileen Burns and Johan Lundh, Remai Modern Co-Executive Director & CEOs, and Remai Modern’s inaugural Curator (Indigenous Art) Tarah Hogue, created an exhibition featuring works that explored or enacted methods of healing, and the pain that often must be endured to get better.

“The exhibition was in part a reaction to the current pandemic, but it also included work created in response to other historic and imminent threats to global wellness,” said Burns and Lundh, who also engaged curatorial support from the entire team at Remai Modern.

Featuring more than 20 regional, national and international artists, the exhibition titled An apology, a pill, a ritual, a resistance touched on a range of subjects from Indigenous responses to smallpox and the 1918 influenza pandemic, to iconic works by artists grappling with the HIV/AIDS crisis. A new acquisition by Siksika Nation artist Adrian Stimson furthered the theme by highlighting apologies and acts of reconciliation that move toward healing relations fractured by colonialism.

Through installation, video, painting, sculpture and more, the works proposed alternate frameworks for care and wellbeing rooted in community and the non-human world. An apology, a pill, a ritual, a resistance included work in the Connect and Marquee galleries, as well as a screening of a film by Alberta Whittle in the SaskTel Theatre.

“The artists in this exhibition underscore the urgency of radically reconfiguring understandings of health. The show offers an opportunity to seek and understand different modes of healing that artists explore and enact, which are often difficult or painful but also joyful and rebellious,” said Burns and Lundh.

Several months into the exhibition’s run, news broke about the discovery of unmarked and mass graves found at former residential schools across Canada. Stimson’s installation directly deals with the residential school experience and the work Kohkominawak was created by Onion Lake Cree Nation artist Linda Young, herself a residential school survivor. To ensure as many people as possible had access to this work, the museum changed its admission structure to “by donation” for the month of June. Thanks to the understanding and generosity of visitors, more than $11,000 was raised. After consultation with community Elders, Knowledge Keepers and residential school survivors, Remai Modern decided to gift the funds to the Saskatoon Survivors Circle.

This initiative was part of a much larger plan at Remai Modern to engage meaningfully with Indigenous communities in Treaty 6 and beyond, to action the Truth and Reconciliation Calls to Action and to amplify Indigenous voices. The museum’s new strategic plan, which drew on the feedback of hundreds of stakeholders from many different communities, prioritizes foregrounding Indigenous perspectives and self-determination throughout the organization.

In September, the museum was transformed by Postcommodity’s most significant presentation to date. The artist collective situated works in Remai Modern’s Marquee and Feature galleries, and other spaces throughout the museum.

Titled Time Holds All the Answers, the exhibition curated by Dr. Gerald McMaster was comprised almost entirely of new work, and included architecturally-scaled sculpture, immersive multi-media installations, and sound and text-based pieces.

“Postcommodity delivered a fresh way of thinking about art and Indigenous artistic practice with Time Holds All the Answers,” said McMaster. “The exhibition was beautifully constructed and designed and put together, but there’s more than that. Postcommodity is really about ideas.”

This exhibition is the culmination of a long-standing friendship and critical dialogue between Postcommodity and McMaster, Adjunct Curator for Remai Modern and Director of the Wapatah Centre for Indigenous Visual Knowledge at OCAD University. Their work together is grounded in mutual respect for the Indigenous communities and lands they are connected to. McMaster is nêhiyaw (Plains Cree) from the Red Pheasant Cree Nation and a member of the Siksika Nation. Cristóbal Martínez is Mestizo of the Genizaro, Pueblo, Manito and Chicano heritages of Northern New Mexico. Kade L. Twist is a citizen of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma.

Time Holds All the Answers took on subjects including environmental crises, Indigenous sovereignty and land stewardship, the forces of capitalism, and the mythologies of modern art and architecture. In sharing their work in Treaty 6 Territory and the Homeland of the Métis, Postcommodity recognized how Indigenous people, stories and art forms have long travelled between the south and the north, since time immemorial.

“A lot of the work that we’re up to in this exhibition is researching, exploring, imagining, thinking about Indigenous relationships and how Indigenous relationships have migrated north-south, south-north,” said Martínez. “We bring a lot of stories to Saskatoon that come from where we were raised and where we are in the spaces in which we’re working. At the same time, the idea is to come to Saskatoon and to trade stories, to bring our stories, and to listen to the stories of the people.”

The artists considered the entire museum as a site where their concept of “re-imagined ceremony” could take shape. Ceremony is usually associated with religious or spiritual rituals and gatherings that celebrate particular events. In Postcommodity’s approach, the museum became an immersive environment, with careful attention to where and how artworks were encountered and moved through. Visitors were welcomed into a space of exchange, where meaning could be created together from a place of shared respect and responsibility.

“Looking at these pieces, they’re generative, they don’t have the answers, but they begin the discussion and I think that that’s what visitors can take away. They’re not coming here for the answers, they’re coming here to participate, to take something home, and to continue the dialogue,” said McMaster.

In 2020, Remai Modern and the University of Saskatchewan Art Galleries and Collection, made a plan to curate an exhibition of works by beloved Saskatoon photographer Thelma Pepper. The exhibition, Ordinary Women, was announced on the artist’s 100th birthday, July 28, 2020.

Sadly, just a few months later, Pepper died peacefully in the city that had been her home for 30 years. While she didn’t get to see the exhibition, her artistic voice resonated throughout the Collection Galleries and, during its nine-month run at Remai Modern, made a big impact on visitors.

“Thelma was a vibrant spirit, who seemed to gravitate to people whose stories were often overlooked,” said Sandra Fraser, Remai Modern Curator (Collections). “We were honoured to highlight her impact as a photographer.”

Pepper documented the lives of Prairie women and men, putting their experiences and resilience into focus. Connecting through shared stories, Pepper illuminated the critical roles women held within their seemingly ordinary, everyday environments. Her photographs exemplify compassion, dignity and intimacy, a result of her deep curiosity and warmth.

“Thelma, through listening, really got to know her subjects and had them feel so comfortable. Often they weren’t even aware of when she was taking the photos, because they were sitting with her in conversation,” said Leah Taylor, Curator (University of Saskatchewan), who co-curated the exhibition alongside Fraser. “Her ability to really capture the essence of her sitters is something that makes the work both natural and compelling.”

The exhibition included Pepper’s three bodies of work, all comprised of silver gelatin prints printed in her home darkroom. Decades of Voices combines photographs and recorded interviews of women, all over the age of 85. The Spaces of Belonging series began as an exploration of the towns along Highway 41 that were slowly disappearing or already gone. Untie the Spirit highlights the dynamic lives of the people living at the Sherbrooke Community Centre, a long-term care facility in Saskatoon.

Sherbrooke’s residents and staff have a special connection to Pepper’s work. She was the centre’s artist-in-residence in 2009. Some of the works from the centre’s collection were generously loaned to Remai Modern for the exhibition.

Remai Modern shared its Thelma Pepper exhibition with residents at Sherbrooke Community Centre using a 360-degree online tour, which residents enjoyed over a wine and cheese.

In addition to the virtual exhibition tour, several Sherbrooke residents also toured the exhibition in person. Thanks to the expertise of Remai Modern Program Guide Alana Moore, the new Sherbrooke artist-in-residence, the visitors were able to make a deeper connection to the art.

Ordinary Women: A Retrospective placed Pepper’s work in context alongside several other women photographers—Rosalie Favell, Mattie Gunterman, Dorothea Lange, Frances Robson and Sandra Semchuk—offering intimate and critical insights into Pepper’s work.

Thelma Pepper: Ordinary Women: A Retrospective was the first such collaboration between Remai Modern and the University of Saskatchewan Art Galleries and Collection (U of S) and included works from both the museum’s and the university’s collections. The two organizations signed a memorandum of understanding in 2017 to collaborate in areas of complementary strength and mission.
In 2021, Remai Modern launched a new pilot project to engage artists working in public performance. Three Saskatchewan artists — Monique Blom, Michel Boutin and Alasdair Rees — were selected to take part in the long-term project, which enabled them to develop new work over a year-long period.

Performance works are often ephemeral, often only lasting for a single performance or event. The intended duration of the project was to develop deeper relationships between the artists and the museum and to offer sustained support for artists to create.

"In recent years, there has been an observable shift towards performance and performance-based practice in contemporary art. Since Remai Modern opened its doors, we have strived to develop a vibrant program of live art that highlights the many ways artists are working in performance today," said Troy Gronsdahl, Curator (Performance and Public Practice).

Gronsdahl worked in collaboration with each artist to develop an individual project plan that included a program of activities including research, peer mentorship, public engagement and the development and presentation of new work.

Rees is a writer and performer whose work investigates the connections that knit together the human world, the natural world and the world of words, while foregrounding his lived experience as a queer person. He has integrated his poetry into compelling performance and moving image works.

Boutin is an artist, arts educator and cultural animateur. Boutin has exhibited his work publicly for more than two decades and has presented his work at museums and galleries throughout the province. Boutin is an active supporter of contemporary art and artist-run culture and is the artistic director of the Indigenous People’s Artist Collective of Prince Albert (IPAC), which he co-founded in 2005.

Blom is an artist and educator living and working in Petrofka. Her practice springs from a desire to explore human relationships as part, or as apart, from nature. Blom’s performance work examines the relationship between women, domesticity and the landscape with recent projects at Princeton University and Nuit Blanche Saskatoon, as well as performances in New York City, Mexico City, Orlando and Tampa.

The project allowed each artist to work toward a final performance in 2022, with additional performances and works created in the leadup to the culmination of their work with the museum.

In June, Rees released his first book, Mon écologie, with a performance and launch at Remai Modern. He also performed at a Looking Up fundraiser in August.

Boutin performed works at WEGO, a new arts festival for families in August, and at the opening of Postcommodity: Time Holds All the Answers in September. The project continued into 2022, with additional performances by all three artists.

In October, works by more than 40 Inuit artists from Remai Modern’s permanent collection were on view in the exhibition Atautchikun | wâhkôtamowin. Guest curated by Missy LeBlanc and Kablusiak, the exhibition highlighted the depth and diversity of Inuit art, both through the collection and through new commissions. The exhibition showcased the fact that Inuit have always engaged in and responded to contemporary dialogues, media and technologies.

“Throughout Remai Modern’s collection, there are examples of artworks that do not fit within the canon of Inuit art as we have come to know it. There are works from the 1960s that utilize motifs commonly found in Inuit art while experimenting with abstraction. These works engage in a dialogue with similar explorations happening in Modern Art. Printworks created in the 1970s are bathed in chartreuse—the colour of the decade—while works from the 1990s feature bold colour blocks similar to those found throughout popular culture at the time. Outliers in the collection, the colours and styles of these works push against the notion of a culture frozen in time,” LeBlanc and Kablusiak said in their curatorial essay.

The curators also wanted to acknowledge the presence of large collections of Inuit art housed across the Prairies, and to honour those whose lands the Remai Modern occupies. To this end, they invited artists with ancestral connections to the region to create new work or present existing works for the exhibition.

Additionally, Atautchikun | wâhkôtamowin featured new works that were commissioned from artists with connections to Inuk artists represented in the museum’s collection. These familial conversations across time and space illustrated what Inuit art is and can be outside of colonial frameworks that focus on monetary gain.

The invited artists featured in Atautchikun | wâhkôtamowin were Kyle Natkusiak Aleekuk, Tony Anguhalluq, Annie Beach, Tenille Campbell, Tarralik Duffy, Amanda Strong and Laakkuluk Williamson Bathory. Their commissions spoke to Indigenous autonomy, contemporary experiences, and the artists’ visions for the future.

“Our curatorial goal for the invited artists in Atautchikun | wâhkôtamowin was to provide a space for them to create works that expand or refuse expectations of Indigenous art,” the guest curators wrote. “The inclusion of artists with familial ties to artists present in the collection was done to remind viewers that Inuit art is a continuum and exists in multiple forms.”

Anguhalluq’s contemporary works were shown alongside work by his adoptive parents, Luke Anguhadluq and Marion Tuu’luq. Saskatoon-born, Iqaluit-based artist Laakkuluk Williamson Bathory created an installation for Atautchikun | wâhkôtamowin, which featured a dress she had worn for years in her performance practice, including at Remai Modern in 2019. Shortly after the exhibition opened, Williamson Bathory was named the 2021 Sobey Art Award winner.

The exhibition also marked an opportunity to conserve these important works from Remai Modern’s collection. In 2021, 38 works including sculptures, paintings and textiles, all but two of which were shown in Atautchikun | wâhkôtamowin, were expertly brought back to perfect condition.

Learning & Engagement

In 2021, nearly 40,000 people took part in Learning & Engagement activities at the museum. Whether they discovered their inner artist in our studio or deepened their understanding on an artwork in conversation with one of our guides, visitors get so much more out of their visit thanks to this knowledgeable and inspiring team.

2021 HIGHLIGHTS

> School Tours: This popular program was challenged by the pandemic, with tour capacities reduced for safety. This number increased in the later part of the year as more people felt comfortable gathering. In 2021, 63 classrooms visited for a total of 1,600 participants.

> Art For Life: In 2021, Remai Modern worked with students at Westmount, Princess Alexandra and Charles Red Hawk schools through the Art For Life program, which encourages strong relationships and lifelong learning.

“Art For Life gives us the opportunity to actualize our students’ full potential as creative, expressive, and artistic young people. We have considerable work to do in this area and it requires programs like Remai Modern’s Art for Life, which would not be possible without community support.”
–Matthew Bodnarchuk, Principal, Westmount Community School

> Ask Me Guides: Learning & Engagement continues to staff Program Guides during open hours to give visitors the chance to have conversations and ask questions. Though this was done in response to the pandemic and a temporary pause on public tours, it has since become a valuable resource for people when they come to Remai Modern. It also gives the team a chance to hear first-hand how people respond to our exhibitions.

> Online Programs: Though programs at the museum returned in greater numbers in 2021, the Learning & Engagement team still engaged with audiences online. We held artist talks and panels, community conversations and more. While our online audience is often based in Saskatoon, we also see viewers from various locations, often related to where the speakers are from. For the Sara Cwynar talk with Legacy Russell we had registrants from Vancouver, Toronto, New York and overseas. For Fireside with Lyndon, with guest Linda Young, we saw attendance from Whitecap Dakota First Nation, La Ronge, Onion Lake and more. In 2021, Remai Modern hosted 23 online events and 34 virtual art camp sessions.

“The dialogue between people is the best part. I often can’t remember the numbers or details or our conversations, just interesting people and the very palpable desire to understand something together. It reminds me on a daily basis that here at Remai Modern we can have our worlds, and points of views expanded.”
–Program Guide Brenda Feist

In 2021, Remai Modern’s Development department launched a new fundraising series, saw one of its best membership quarters yet and secured funds crucial to museum programs, among other highlights.

We continue to be grateful for all the ways our community supports the museum. From our donors and sponsors to our members and visitors, Remai Modern is indebted to the people of Saskatoon and beyond who believe in the transformative power of art.

> Looking Up: In August, the museum launched a new fundraising series called Looking Up. These unique events, each tailored to a specific exhibition, were an opportunity to celebrate the art and artists on display at the museum. The three-part series included evenings with food, art and performances inspired by Zachari Logan: Ghost Meadows, Thelma Pepper: Ordinary Women and A Formative Encounter: African and Oceanic Artists and Picasso.

> Annual appeal: The department’s annual appeal outperformed past campaigns on a number of metrics: dollars raised, response rate and return on investment. This year’s campaign raised more than $20,000, all from individual donors. These funds are then matched by the Frank and Ellen Remai Foundation. The donations supported the Art for Life program at Westmount Community School.

> Frank and Ellen Remai Foundation: The museum’s lead patron continues to show remarkable support for the museum. In February, to acknowledge the challenging landscape for arts organizations as a result of the pandemic, the Frank & Ellen Remai Foundation pledged an additional $800,000 to Remai Modern. The contribution gave the museum a much-needed lift as it continued to offer world-class art programs, adapt to a changing world and build fundraising momentum.

> Membership: New membership strategies, including a revamped corporate membership program and a membership contest to win an art lover’s trip to Toronto, resulted in a strong year for membership sales and renewals, particularly in the last quarter of the year.

> Lugo: In the interest of public health and safety, LUGO, Remai Modern’s annual art party and fundraiser, was not held in 2021. However, ticket sales for LUGO 2022 launched in late 2021, with premium tickets selling out before the end of the year and a noticeable uptake in membership renewals to take advantage of the member ticket price.
